Preparations at Boston for the Reception of Baron Renfrew.

The most brilliant demonstration that will be made in Boston will be at the ball at the Boston Theatre. "We have reason to believe," says the Atlas, "that this will be altogether the finest terpsichorean affair ever witnessed in our city. It is intended that such shall be the case at all events. In no other way can so elegant, pleasant and significant an honor be paid the Prince, and none that would probably give him so much gratification. He is young, is fond of gaiety, and stories in just such an occasion as will be given him."

Among the invited guests are the President of the United States, Miss Lane, Secretary Cass, Governors of the British Provinces, foreign Ministers, the Earl of Wellington, Earl of Mulgrave and Count of Malmesbury, the Duke and Duchess of Clarence, Sir Henry Holland, the Marquis of Granard, Sir Fairfax, Montreal, Quebec and Hamilton, Gen. Troope, and also Sir Fenwick Williams, the hero of Kars, who is now commander-in-chief of the army in Canada, and in military rank is second only to the Duke of Cambridge. The invitation (adds the Atlas) have been necessarily limited, and in this vicinity only the Governor and Mrs. Davis, and the British Consul at this port, have been invited.

The Committee on Decorations, after examination of the various plans produced, have adopted the elegant design submitted by Mr. Shutz and Mr. Rothe. These gentlemen are well known to possess taste and originality, and as they will have a wide latitude for its display, it is probable that the most appropriate and effective arrangement will be made.

It is understood that there is to be no use made of hunting or flags—hunting has had its day for an elegant hall-room—but velvet, silk, satin and flowers, employed by an artist, will impart a novel and rich appearance to the auditorium.

The "red walls" are to give place to a French glass which will absorb less light and give more warmth to the room. The great benefit will be to make it as light as possible, and thereby more comfortable.
